

Spring 2010

Local Impacts of Global Commodity Systems

Tuesdays/Thursdays 13:25-14:40 (room to be announced)

CRS 441/541 S 3 Credits

Globalization is a key factor affecting the transformation and sustainability of human communities.

This course begins by introducing students to the evolution of conceptualizations of globalization, including its social, political and economic dimensions. Students will then investigate what significance globalization processes have on human communities, and what the possibilities are for communities to respond to globalization in a manner that promotes sustainable human development.

Part of the Minor in Community Studies